

G.O.A.T

The Greatest of All Time aka the GOAT isn't what y'all usually would think, which are athletes like lebron or famous singers like kendrick. My GOAT is not a basketball player or a rapper. My GOAT is an actor who has completely caught my eye and made me get more into the way I see Korean dramas. That person is Choi Hyun-wook through his emotional acting, powerful screen presence, and ability to play completely different characters. He is also a young Korean actor who is outstanding and has a very positive presence of character which would enable him to hold such a title in terms of young Korean actors. First, what makes someone the GOAT is not just popularity. It is not just good looks, a true GOAT has talent and impact. They leave a mark on the audience and make people feel something real. Choi-Hyun-wook does exactly that in my eyes. Every time he appears on screen, he makes his character feel like a real person instead of someone reading lines from a script. That kind of natural acting is rare, especially for someone still early in his career.

He is one of the greatest at acting due to his emotional range. In Weak Hero Class 1, he plays a complex and troubled student called Suho. The emotions shown by his character are as real as any emotion he can show anger, sadness, loyalty, and fear all at the same time. Even in a few moments even in silence his movements and expression carry the emotion completely. That depth of acting is a skilled craft by which very few are able to express their sadness through the audience as easily as he does. When I watched him act in his role I was seeing the genuine struggle of a person rather than being entertained by a fictional character. Another reason why he referred to being my GOAT is his different skills as an actor. There are some actors that always play the same kind of character probably because they believe it to be their comfort zone. That is not the case for Choi Hyun-wook. In Twinkling Watermelon he plays a very different type of character than what he played in Weak Hero Class 1. This character is full of youthfulness and passion for growing up, love of friendship, one to carry emotion through a different language, and experiencing one's first love. So, with the change in characters from Weak Hero Class 1 to Twinkling watermelon shows that he is capable of doing many different kinds of characters and displaying his talent. An actor that is known as the GOAT must be able to demonstrate their ability to adapt through their characters.

Another reason why he is the GOAT is the different kinds of roles he does from being a joyful character to being a totally different type of character that doesn't really suit him but yet he pulls it off . He recently is working on a series right now and doing a different show called curtain up class. That is very difficult to do. Keeping up with two things at once especially for an actor can be very difficult but he is proving that he can work through this. Recently an actor he was very close with passed away and even after that he keeps pushing and keeping his head high. On his recent show that he is doing right now in one of the episodes he was overthinking about if he was gonna be loved by the children participating with him. That shows a lot for his character even outside of acting he is the sweetest. Also Choi Hyun-wook showed his craft further with Racket Boys; in which he played a very competitive, yet passionate, badminton player. In this role Choi Hyun-wook showed a great balance of competitive play along with having the ability to add moments of humor and heart to his performance. Even in a light-hearted sports drama, he made the character feel important and very memorable. Therefore, no matter which type of film or television (action, love, sports) when acting Hyun-wook gives his full effort, which is another reason he is known as the GOAT.

Acting is not just about awards or ratings. It is about connection within yourself and the characters. When I watch his performances, I feel connected to the characters. I understand their struggles and emotions. Many fans online also talk about how his acting feels “real” and “raw.” When an actor can make thousands of people around the world feel something deeply, that is powerful. Some people might argue that he is too young to be called the Greatest of All Time. They might say he needs more years in the industry. But being the GOAT is not only about how long you have worked. It is about the quality of your work. Even in a short time, he has delivered performances that many actors cannot achieve in decades. Greatness is not measured only by time, it is measured by impact and skill. In conclusion, Choi Hyun-wook is the GOAT in my world because of his emotional depth, adjust, and powerful connection with audiences in just a small amount of time. I have watched other actors but they can't top him in my opinion. He transforms into every character he plays and makes each one unforgettable. Whether he is acting in an intense school drama, a romantic story, or a sports series, and even a hard headed man, he proves that he is not just another actor he is exceptional. For all these reasons, I confidently argue that he truly deserves the title of Greatest of All Time.
